This is our recipe for a Christmas magazine

Take one story of a man who thought he could get along without Christmas - and found he couldn't. Add another short story by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews-who wrote "The Perfect Tribute."

Sprinkle in three long stories by such writers as Kathleen Norris, Arthur Somers Roche and James Oliver Curwood.

Season with scores of suggestions to help you select your gifts easily and well.

Spice with ten pages of Fashions and thicken with special articles and departments which help you with everything from carving your Christmas turkey to choosing your children's playthings.

Put inside of an exquisite cover by Jessie Willcox Smith and you have a feast tonight, made to the queen's taste-ready now at your newsdealer's!

of Commerce of the third state, and cared that American business. In common with like interests of other nations, should be consulted in framing the peace conditions. "With this in mind," sail Mr. Wheeler, "I addressed a letter to the president on Nov. 23, containing the following inquire. "Would it be beinful if American industry should name a thoroughly representative committee, particularly informed, regarding the basic industries of the countries, to be present in France during the course of the peace conference and available for counsel on such phases of the peace negotiations as may bear directly upon commerce and industry. If such a group would be useful, great care would be taken to select men having the largest vision and the most generous impulses in connection with the resumption of industrial articity throughout the world." "To this monity the following reply." KEEP YOUR HAIR "To tids inquiry the following reply was received: "You may be sure that I would send a message to the meeting at Aliantle City if I knew what message to send, but frankly I do not, it is a time when we must all thoughtfully take coursel and apply the wisest action to circumstances as they arise. "I am, of course, engrossed with preparations for leaving for the other side. I hope that you will extend my warmest greetings to those who will assemble at Atlantic City. "It may be that the president has in mind, or has already selected an advisory industrial commission with whom the members of the pears conference may take counsel as occasion arrises, but upon this point his letter is silent except in the broad statement that "we must all thoughtfully take counsel and apply the wisely arise." Mr Wheeler spoke on two planess of reconstruction and readjustment one cealing with international relations and the other with internal affairs. On the former phases he said that failure to deal generously in the distribution of raw materials will seriously impede the industrial restoration of nations not fortunate enough to possess basic materials of their own. Should not the linited States lead, the speaker asked, in proposing an international plan for rationing basic materials. Such a plan of rationing basic materials. Such a plan for rationing basic materials. Such a plan of rationing head materials. Such a plan for rationing head materials. Such a plan of rationing head materials. Such a plan for rationing head materials such a high plan for the province expert in handling those commodities.

Making the pun, and carrying it into effect should be left to those who best know the processes of production and distribution with such government participation as may give official sanction to she plan.

The principle of economic boycott. Mr. Wheeler and, "Is neither politically or economically sound, nor is the principle of favored nation in commercial treaties."

ciple of 'favored nation' in commercial treaties.

Of the problems of internal adjustment Mr. Wheeler said:

"Tearing asunder the normal relationships of business and compelling suspension of activity in some listances to meet the emergency of a war program is properly a function of the government with such acquiescence and aid as business may provide, but the task of making readjustments or rebuilding those same industries into their old uses and efficiency is the function of business with such acquiescence and aid as the government may provide."
